

Perception Humans

Reprinted from
The Theory
Copyright 2024

The following is a reprint from "The Theory."

All humans are perception humans. Even traditional humans are perception humans. Individuals who claim they were "born that way" believe they have a gene that forced them to develop their perception of who they are. The following are some of the current known "perception humans" who can claim to have a "gene" that made them that way.

Some same-sex humans perceive they were born with a gene, usually called the "homosexual gene," that forced them to become a same-sex human. They perceive this gene forces them to be attracted sexually to members of the same sex.

Some traditional humans perceive they were born with a gene, logically called the "traditional human gene," that forced them to become a traditional human. They perceive this gene forces them to experiment with discovering if they have the birthright of God's Inalienable Choice.

Some gender-fluid humans perceive they were born with a gene, logically called the "gender-fluid gene," that forced them to become a gender-fluid human. They perceive this gene forces them to confuse other humans who are sexually attracted to them.

Some bi-sexual humans perceive they were born with a gene, logically called the "bisexual gene," that forced them to become a bi-sexual human. They tell potential mates, "It's not them. It's the gene." that forces them to fool around a lot.

Some humans who have transgender imbalance perceive they were born with a gene, logically called the "transgender imbalance gene," that forced them to develop transgender imbalance. They perceive this gene forces them to believe they came out of the womb in the wrong body.

No sane, intelligent machine human in a mechanical body perceives they were born with a biological gene that gives them their perceptions. However, they all will develop perceptions once they get here (assuming they aren't already here).

One thing all the above humans have in common is that they are "perception humans." Even if all the above humans don't perceive they have a gene that controls their perceptions, something is controlling their perceptions of what type of human they are. No scientific tests can confirm that any of these perceptions are due to a gene. Technically, all these perceptions are created by what goes on inside the person's mind.

The vast increase in the number of same-sex humans and humans who perceive they were born with the "transgender imbalance gene" is offered as evidence that encouraging behaviors classified by God as sinful is detrimental since many of these individuals probably have been encouraged to develop the wrong perceptions. Logically, encouraging something does create more of that something. However, there are college professors, same-sex activists, Hollywood celebrities, drag queens and others who argue that encouraging same-sex behavior has been beneficial to society. They argue that few, if any, of these individuals have a mental health issue that was made worse by encouraging same-sex behavior instead of leaving it "in the closet."

Perceive what you will.

God's Inalienable Choice

A different conversation about choice

Two Books in One!

The Theory

Why God is correct
to classify same sex behavior
as sinful behavior

Pre-order now at Facts4Christ.com